Even though participation was very limited in this part of the lesson, some good ideas were discussed. ❑ Value → positivity & endeavour: Elicited from students. ❑ Generally, the lesson is well-organised. There was a slight change in the lesson plan but to the favour of the students. Different teaching strategies are used including discussions and teacher handled higher-order thinking skills through asking some question that provoke students' thinking skills. Instructions are clear and so most students took part in the lesson. Before the listening took place, the teacher stimulated the students' interest in the topic through checking their prior knowledge about Helen Keller. ❑ However, for more students' engagement and participation set more graded practice after presenting the new words. We need to create room for the students to practice the language through as peaking activity. Play the recording twice. The first one without displaying the print.
